

MASTER THESIS OF FACULTY OF LAW

UNIVERSITY OF MACAU

A CASE STUDY ON LEGAL TRANSPLANT:

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION

IN CHINESE ENVIRONMENTAL GOVERNANCE

SUPERVISOR: PROF. SALVATORE MANCUSO
STUDENT NAME: LI MIN
STUDENT NUMBER: M-A6-6130-0
TIME OF SUBMISSION: 31/08/2009

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Chapter I Introduction.....	7
Chapter II Legal Transplant	12
2.1 Terminology	12
2.2 Alan Watson’s Positive Theory on Legal Transplants	17
2.3 Pierre Legrand’s Negative Theory on Legal Transplants.....	19
2.4 The Neutral Theory on Legal Transplants.....	21
Chapter III Unsolved Topics in Legal Transplants.....	25
3.1 Law and Society	25
3.2 When Legal Transplant is Needed?.....	30
3.2.1 External Incentives	32
3.2.1.1 Incentives from the Donor Country	33
3.2.1.2 Incentives from International Organizations.....	34
3.2.2 Internal Reasons	35
3.2.2.1 Reasons of Legal Reform	35
3.2.2.2 Reasons behind Legal Transplant	36
3.3 When Recognized as A Successful One?.....	39
3.3.1 How to Define Success?.....	40
3.3.2 Conditions for a Successful Legal Transplant.....	45
3.4 Legal Adaptation	49
3.4.1 Does Every Legal Transplant Need Adaptation?	50
Chapter IV Law and Society.....	53
4.1 Environmental Law in P.R.C.....	53
4.1.1 Environmental Law in Chinese legal system	53
4.1.2 Institutional Structure to Protect Environment in China	58
4.1.2.1 State Environmental Protection Administration (SEPA).....	58
4.1.2.2 Environmental Protection Bureaus (EPBs).....	60

4.2 Public Participation in Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) in Chinese Environmental Law	62
4.2.1 Is This An Example of Legal Transplant?.....	63
4.2.2 Civil Society's Attitude towards Public Participations	66
4.2.2.1 FON's Attitude toward the Provisional Measures.....	67
4.2.2.2 Public's Attitude toward the Provisional Measures	70
4.3 Law and Society in China with Reference to Public Participation in EIA	74
Chapter V When Legal Transplant Is Needed?	78
5.1 External Causes of Transplant Public Participation in Environmental Impact Assessment into China	78
5.1.1 Prestige as an Incentive	79
5.1.2 Pressures from International Organizations	81
5.2 Internal Causes of Transplant Public Participation in Environmental Impact Assessment into China	82
5.2.1 Legislator's Personal Experience	82
5.2.2 Policies	83
5.2.3 Efficiency	84
5.2.4 Zweigert and Kotz's Influence in China.....	85
Chapter VI When the Legal Transplant is Successful?	86
6.1 Introduction of Xiamen PX Project.....	86
6.1.1 Background Introduction of the Xiamen PX Project.....	86
6.1.2 Public Participation in EIA Process in Xiamen PX Project	89
6.2 Can the Provisional Measures be Viewed as Success?	90
6.2.1 Objectives of the Provisional Measures	91
6.2.2 Achievements in the case of Xiamen PX Project.....	92
6.3 Conditions for a Successful Legal Transplant for Public Participation in EIA.....	95
6.3.1 Motivations of Drafting the Provisional Measures.....	95
6.3.2 Environmental Law as a Special Legal Domain.....	96

6.3.3 Willingness to Change.....	96
6.3.4 Legal Adaptation According to Local Conditions.....	97
6.3.5 Time.....	98
Part VII Legal Adaptation.....	99
7.1 Necessity of Legal Adaptation in the Provisional Measures	99
7.2 Adaptations in the Provisional Measures	100
7.2.1 Adjustment of Application Scope of Public Participation.....	101
7.3 Adaptations Forward	102
7.3.1 Public Participation and Democracy	102
7.3.2 Public Participation and Public Awareness	105
7.3.3 Public Participation and Information Disclosure.....	107
7.3.4 Means of Public Participation.....	108
7.3.5 Public Participation and Local Government.....	109
Chapter VIII Conclusions	111
8.1 Law and Society in China.....	112
8.2 Reasons for Legal Transplants in China.....	114
8.3 Successful Legal Transplants in China.....	115
8.4 Adaptation after Legal Transplants in China.....	117
Bibliography	119